GENERAL INCREASE SHOWN IN REPORT OF BANK FOR JUNE

Recent Rains Relieve Drought Condition Over Wide Area

RETAIL TRADE GAINS OVER MAY

Department Stores Had Best Month Of The Year In May

(Associated Press)

ATLANTA, Ga., June 29—General business conditions in the sixth federal reserve district, comprising the states of Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Mississippi, Tennessee and Louisiana, compare favorably with those existing the same time last year with business statistics showing increases over that period, the June report of the bank, made public today, shows.

Weather conditions have been more seasonal during the latter part of May and early June and recent rains have relieved the drought which with low temperatures, earlier in the spring, had caused crops generally to be from two to three weeks late.

Staple crops in Florida are late due to the dry weather and the condition of citrus fruits has declined during May because of weather conditions, the report says, but the prospects still are better than at the same time in 1925.

Retail trade in the sixth district was in larger volume during May than for any previous month this year and department store sales were higher than for any other May since 1920. This also is true, it says, of wholesale trade throughout the district.

Cotton consumption in the cotton-growing states was slightly greater than in May last year, but production of cloth and yarn by mills reporting to the bank were smaller than at that time.

Savings deposits in ninety one reporting banks at the end of May were 11.3 per cent greater than a year ago, and deposits to individual accounts for May were 2.5 per cent greater than in May, 1925. Commercial failures showed decreases of 44.3 per cent in number and 9.8 per cent in liabilities over May of 1925.

Loans and discounts at reporting member banks in selected cities were 7.3 per cent greater on June 9 this year than a year previous, and discounts for member banks in the district by the Federal Reserve bank of Atlanta were 77.6 per cent greater than a year ago.

Department store sales in the district were greater during May than for any other month this year and exceeded sales in the corresponding month last year by 10.4 per cent. Sales for the first five months of 1926 have exceeded those reported for the same period in 1925 by 7.6 per cent.

Continued drought in some sections of the district has adversely affected crops and made replanting necessary, the report says, but this condition has been corrected somewhat by recent rains in various sections. Rains in the central and southern sections of Georgia during May supplied sufficient moisture to promote normal growth but in many north central counties of that state the prolonged drought immediately following the planting had a disastrous effect on crops. The report estimates that crops generally are from two to three weeks late.

An increase of 49 per cent is shown in the quality of cotton ginned from last year's crop over 1924.

Imports and exports through the port of New Orleans during March, 1926 (the latest month for which detailed statistics are available) show increases over last year, according to the review.

Building permits issued in the sixth district during May showed an increase of 22.2 per cent over May of last year, but there was an increase of only 4.6 per cent in point of total value of buildings for which permits have been issued.

Lumber production exceeded by 5 per cent the production of usual months.

Ponzi Arrested Enroute Abroad

Famed Financial Wizard Prisoner In Hands of Houston Sheriff

(Associated Press)

HOUSTON, Texas, June 29.—Charles Ponzi, famed Boston financier and Florida land promoter, today was in the custody of Sheriff T. A. Binford, after having been trailed to New Orleans, where he was arrested yesterday on a ship which previously had sailed for Houston.

"Being a fugitive is not the most comfortable feeling in the world," he said, at a belated breakfast in a Houston restaurant this morning. "Although, he hastened to add, "not a fugitive from justice I was a fugitive from injustice, oppression and persecution."

He had not decided, he said, whether to return to Boston where he faces sentence of several years on criminal charges, without extradition.

Previously, the Houston authorities had been in communication with Boston by long distance telephone to learn if they would permit Ponzi to return there in the custody of a Houston officer. If they would agree, Sheriff said, in repeating what had occurred at a conference behind closed doors, Ponzi had indicated he would go back without the formality of extradition. Otherwise, the sheriff said, Ponzi had indicated he would resist extradition.

Ponzi insisted that he had quietly gone aboard an Italian steamer at Tampa on June 16 as a member of the crew. He had spent the intervening time on the ship, except for brief periods of shore leave in Houston and had touched in Galveston and New Orleans. He knew, he said, that the ultimate destination of the ship was an Italian port.

"I was," he remarked, "headed for Italy. I do not know yet whether I have done the right thing. I have not decided."

Ponzi seemed unrepentant about his character. He talked freely and posed for a picture on the steps of the county jail with Sheriff Binford and Deputy Sheriff George Lacey, who trailed him to New Orleans and took him from the ship.

PATROLMAN IS DEAD AFTER AN ATTACK

Crazed Negro May Claim Other Victims Now In Hospitals

(Associated Press)

BALTIMORE, June 29—Patrolman Webster Shuman died today from a bullet fired by Dancy Lee, 35 year old, negro, who armed with a rifle and two revolvers brought down nine persons before he was slain by police. Of these remaining victims Police Clerk Thomas Dillon is expected to die, and two others also were reported in a serious condition.

The shooting started with a quarrel yesterday between Lee and another negro whom Lee shot. Lee then procured a rifle and another revolver and started to terrorize the neighborhood.

Lee was once an inmate of the insane ward at a city hospital.

FORMER RESIDENT IN SHERIFF ROLE

Max King And Father Break Up Attempt To Rob Store

Max O. King, former member of the faculty of Decatur high school and coach of athletic teams there, and well known baseball twirler, stepped from his baseball togs long enough to play the role of sheriff at his home in Arlton, Ala., according to word received here.

Mr. King, who is at home with his parents, while he is performing as a member of the pitching staff of the Evergreen baseball club, aided his father, a prominent Arlton merchant in nabbing two would-be burglars.

About three o'clock one morning recently, the King home was notified that someone was breaking in the King store. Arming themselves, the father and son went to the mercantile establishment, arriving just in time to meet two young fellows departing with a quantity of goods, it was stated. The younger King stood guard over the prisoners, while the elder went for an officer. The two men later were placed in jail.

Former Prison Warden Declares Money Was Spent Legally

(Associated Press)

BIRMINGHAM, June 29—Charles R. Davis, former convict warden at Flat Top mines, today denied charges that $119,282 of the state's funds had been "misappropriated" by him and stated that the money had been expended in the regular operation of the prison camp at the mine.

The denial was made in a statement by Davis, through his attorneys Roderick Beddow and Hugh A. Locke. The statement was made following charges by State Examiner C. C. Brooks that $119,282 was disbursed through falsifying affidavits and "padding of payrolls."

NEGRO FIRES INTO CROWD, ONE KILLED

Black Accused Of A Theft Of Gasoline at Linden, Ala.

(Associated Press)

LINDEN, Ala., June 29—Firing bullets into a crowd of men standing behind the F. S. Howze Motor company last night, two negroes killed "Mat" Bailey, 27, salesman of the firm.

Tom Kimbrough, negro, had been caught stealing gasoline, reports state and the men were gathered around listening to his explanation of the affair.

Suggestions had been made that he be whipped for the theft since numerous cases of gasoline theft had been reported lately.

While preparations were being made for this punishment two negro men, thought to be brothers of Kimbrough, suddenly appeared at the side of the building and began firing.

Although about half a dozen were around Kimbrough, Bailey was the only one hit.

The negroes were trailed by bloodhounds for about five miles from the scene of the killing to a negro house where they are said to have acquired an old car.

He Is Tired of Grafters Living In Luxury, He Declares

(Associated Press)

WASHINGTON, June 29—Senator Heflin, democrat, Alabama, today notified the senate that he would oppose adjournment of congress unless some arrangement was made to dispose of the Muscle Shoals problem.

"If it is not to be taken up at this session," he said, he wanted some understanding as to when it will be considered.

"I am tired of a lot of grafters and propagandists living in luxury here in Washington on the people of the Tennessee Valley."

He said: "If senators don't agree then, they hire newspapers to attack them and have cartoonists ridicule them as they have done me. We ought to dispose of Muscle Shoals and give the farms the benefit of the fertilizer and the government the income from the power."

ABOUT $80,000 TO BE PAID ON JULY 1 TO STOCKHOLDERS

Financial Institutions Will Cut Melon This Week

CHECKS GO OUT ON JUNE 30th

Other Plants Also Are Preparing To Award Owners of Stock

Approximately $80,000 will be paid to stockholders of local financial institutions in their semi-annual dividend payments on July 1, it was estimated today.

Checks for the semi-annual payments will be placed in the mails by most of the institutions on June 30 for delivery on the morning of the first. The greater part of the distribution will be within the Twin Cities, turning into trade channels another large volume of funds.

The local financial institutions, during the past year, have enjoyed unusually successful terms, the July 1 reports will show, it was believed today. The seven larger institutions included in the estimated distribution of dividends are: Tennessee Valley bank, Morgan County National Bank, City National bank, Central National bank, Tennessee Valley Building and Loan Association, New Morgan County Building and Loan Association, the Albany Building and Loan Association.

The $80,000 estimate is, of course, exclusive of the numerous other local institutions which will declare semi-annual dividends July 1. Persons in touch with financial institutions here were unable today to estimate these additional amounts, but were unanimous in the belief that many additional thousands of dollars will be paid.

MEXICAN DEATHS TO REACH NEAR 1,000

Correspondent Tells Of Devastated Areas In Farming Sections

(Associated Press)

MEXICO CITY, June 29—An estimate of the total fatalities in the flood of Leon will exceed 1,000 is given by a correspondent who has just returned from the devastated region.

He says that the exact number of victims never will be known because the flood waters carried away bodies from Leon in the densely populated farming section.

Bodies are found in mud left by the receding waters and there are fears that an epidemic may result. Thirteen hundred houses have been destroyed. Six thousand families are lodged in public buildings while 6,000 more are living in the open on the hillside, refusing to return to the city in fear of a recurrence of the flood.

Only the poor sections of the city suffered badly from the invasion of the waters. The flood only reached two feet in depth in the between residential sections. The houses there were scarcely damaged because they are of stone construction.

The number of bodies recovered thus far aggregate 100, but 1,000 persons are missing.

WATER SERVICE IS GOOD IN TWIN CITIES

State Inspector Makes Examination Of Local Plant

The water service in the Twin Cities is good. This was the opinion of State Inspector Menke, after an examination of the water plant, equipment, service and product in Albany and Decatur.

Mr. Menke now is engaged in examining the water services of various North Alabama communities and left here for Moulton, from where he expected to go to Florence and other cities in that section of the Muscle Shoals district.

The Tennessee Valley laboratory, which conducts periodical examinations of the water supply of the Twin Cities, also announced today that these tests showed the water being served here of unusually high quality and purity.

Water Company Personnel Is Same

No change in the personnel of the Alabama Water company here is expected following the purchase of the interests in the company of John B. Weakley by Eugene Fies and associates. The local office is continuing operation, without change of any kind, it was stated today.

ROAD FORCES BEGIN WORK ON NORTHERN APPROACH TO BRIDGE

Bridge To Be Built Over Shallow End of Swan Lake

BEE LINE WILL BE CHANGED LITTLE

The Road Has Already Been Located, Forces Are Clearing

Road forces today are employed in clearing the right-of-way for the approach of the new Tennessee River bridge on the north bank of the river.

Road crews went into the river bottoms of Limestone county, lying between the stream and Swan lake to begin work for the foundation of the new Bee Line route. The road has already been located and these crews of men are employed in clearing the land for the new highway. The highway will extend to the overhead bridge across the Southern Railway.

Officials of the Koss Construction company are hopeful that the new Tennessee River bridge will be completed by January 1, 1927, and it is the plan of the state highway commission to have the approaches to the giant structure completed by the same time.

The work which is underway today in Limestone county will include the building of a 300 foot bridge across Swan Lake, the new highway route probably entering the present Bee Line highway will be paved from the new bridge site to the overhead bridge.

The two projects the Tennessee River bridge and the north approaches and highway will go easily past $700,000.

Construction of the bridge has proceeded to the building of the fourth pier, while work is being done on the first part of the floor, reaching between the first and second arches. Caissons for the third arch have been set in position. High water conditions have failed to hamper the program this spring.

TAKES POISON AFTER ATTACK BY BLACKS

Little Rock Woman In Hospital Gaspes Out Details of Story

(Associated Press)

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., June 29—Mrs. Laura Norton, 22, of New Orleans who yesterday swallowed poison, after, according to her statement to hospital attaches, two negro bell-boys, in a hotel here attacked her, still was in a critical condition today.

Plans of the police to question her were held in abeyance because of her condition. No arrests had been made this morning.

Police sought confirmation of her story and description of the negroes, lacking which they made no progress with the case.

Hotel employees found her unconscious an empty poison bottle by her when they were attracted to her room by groans. At the general hospital she is said to have gasped the information to a nurse during a moment of consciousness.

Two women companions told of her telephoning them early yesterday that "something awful had happened." They said he was showing effects of liquor when they left her at the hotel Sunday night.

Miss Mabel Drake won the season pass, offered for a name for the new amusement park. Her suggestion was "The Central Park Airdome."

R. A. Marchini has rented a building at 515 Second avenue and will open a merchant tailoring establishment July 15.

Friends of Hon. Henry A. Skeggs will honor him at a banquet tonight at the Lyons Hotel.

Mr. and Mrs. C. K. Lide are in Calhoun, Tenn.

Jefferson county furnishes a new political wrinkle. A candidate for the legislature down there is making his race on a platform of "less law making." He declares there would be "less law breaking if there was less law making." There may be something in what he says.

Flo Ziegfeld, who "glorified" the American girl by reducing the quantity of her clothing, is reported to be so "disgusted" with the present styles, that he will lead a crusade for "more clothing for women." That story smacks strongly of a publicity stunt.

Those who, for one reason or another may imagine their lot is hard, may take heart from the story of Russell Scott, of Chicago. He has been adjudged sane and released from the asylum, only to be tried for his life on a charge of murder.

A Berlin resident, angered by the sight of his wife with abbreviated skirt, showed his temper by becoming intoxicated and appearing in the streets wearing only his bedroom slippers and a shirt. He failed to convince the court he was entitled to imitate midday's habiliments and the experience cost him $10 and a night in jail.

After reading the Nashville Tennessean, one wonders why Governor Peay even bothers to wage a campaign, his prospects for re-election are so bright. Then, after reading the Nashville Banner, one feels like offering condolences to the Tennessee governor, so certain does it appear that he will be swamped at the polls by Hill McAlister.

Here is an editorial opinion, the sentiment of which has been expressed often in this newspaper, and in which The Daily thoroughly concurs. The Farms and Industries, speaking of future education in Alabama, says: "That class of schools (speaking of the common schools) should be taken care of first. If there be any shortage of funds, the shortage should not be made up by taking the money needed by common schools to forward higher education."

Senator Walsh, in an article in The New York Times, discusses the proposed referendum on prohibition. He calls attention to the fact that national prohibition became a fact only after thirty-three states had gone dry, "after two-thirds of the national legislature had been elected to submit the amendment and after legislatures had been elected in all but two of the states to ratify it." He then asks the following pertinent question: "Is there any so simple-minded as to imagine that the orators and the journals that now proclaim that the law is not being enforced and that it cannot be enforced, that it offends against the fundamental and inalienable rights, that it is not supported by the moral sense of the people—and thus encourage violators of the law or extenuate their offenses and hold out hope of escape from punishment—does anyone imagine that they will reverse their attitude and bend all their energies to promote observance of it?"

TEXAS IS DEMOCRATIC, BUT HER LOVE OF PARTY WILL NOT SPLIT HER TERRITORY

Texas is democratic, has been and probably always will be, but this stuff about Texas splitting up her territory, in order to increase the number of democratic senators in the senate is so much piffle.

Anyone who has ever seen a lantern-jawed Texan, big hat and all, hold forth on the numerous separate and distinct reasons why Texas not only is the greatest state in the union in point of acreage, but the greatest commonwealth in the universe on several other scores, will be hard to convince that the Longhorns have any idea of dividing their great state into four or more smaller ones in order to accommodate the democratic party, as deserving as the latter is.

The Chattanooga News, which holds much the same views, says of the situation:

Southern democrats, we believe, are in general sympathy with Congressman Wurzbach, a Texas republican, in his efforts to deodorize his own political machine in that state. They think, however, that he has tackled a good sized job. But they are inclined to smile when Mr. Wurzbach expresses alarm lest Texas decide to divide itself into four or five democratic states in order to swamp the republican party, at least, in the Senate. Texas people would be delighted to squelch the republicans, but they have small inclination to split their great state up into fragments to accomplish even so beneficent a purpose. Instead, they have an abiding confidence that the growing enlightenment of the country will soon proceed to the point where it can no longer tolerate spiritual wickedness in high places.

Fears that she might at some time undertake such a scheme are based on the fact that a condition of the admission of Texas to the Union was that, if she desired, she might organize as many as four other states out of her territory. Numerous times has the matter been agitated—in other portions of the country, Texas herself, however, has never manifested the slightest inclination to do any such thing. There is small probability that she ever will. She has, nevertheless, ever been ready to lend her immense weight to the crushing of the last evidence of life out of the republican party. In her steadfastness in that purpose there is neither variability nor shadow of turning.

Every election Texas sends her democratic votes along to help out the general cause, but we would soon believe there wasn't 15 cents spent to win the republican senatorial nomination in Pennsylvania as to believe that Texas will commit territorial suicide for the sake of the democratic party.

THOSE WHO PLAY WITH FIRE VERY FREQUENTLY ARE BURNED

There is an ancient bit of philosophy to the effect that those who play with fire very frequently are burned. Most modern politicians appear to realize the truthfulness of the statement. Some, however, say they do not. A notable exception to the general rule is A. H. Carmichael, a candidate for governor.

The Birmingham Age-Herald, grown tired of the many uncomplimentary things Mr. Carmichael has had to say about newspapers in general and the Age-Herald in particular, Monday morning published a sizzling editorial entitled, "No man can serve two masters: Matthew 6:24," which, if it did not warn Mr. Carmichael up somewhat, proves that his feelings are encased in asbestos.

In face of the risk of singeing the paper, The Daily republishes from the Age-Herald these paragraphs of the editorial:

"It is an age-old custom when a janizary of privilege cannot obtain support of newspapers adhering to the principle of popular government—as differentiated from one controlled by those representing a private interest seeking special favor—that such newspapers become the targets of misrepresentation and abuse.

"To illustrate: From Carmichael headquarters on yesterday was issued a statement that he is not 'the elected standard bearer of the wealthy newspaper publishers' and that he is not the 'pet' of the publisher of the Age-Herald, the Mobile Register and Montgomery Journal."

"This comes from political headquarters of the very man who unsuccessfully solicited, in person, in interviews sought by him, the support of the Age-Herald and associated newspapers; the very man who sent friends upon the same mission; the very man who, the day following the Age-Herald's expression of the belief that Mr. Patterson was the most available man to defeat McDowell, used condemnatory words with respect to the papers whose support he sought; from the very man who condemns support solicited for himself, when given to Mr. Patterson."

If that isn't a blistering dose for somebody, there are tougher political hides in this section than we had any reason to believe. Perhaps Mr. Carmichael has heard the story concerning the grapes that were sour. Surely it would refresh him, should he care to read it again. He might be able to find some practical application to present-day politics in Alabama.

MINISTER TAKES OVER EDITORIAL JOB FOR ONE WEEK, FINDS TASK IS TOUGH

The attitude of the general public toward newspaper work is much the same as the reaction of the average person toward the Charleston dance steps. The rhythm looks easy, but the execution is more difficult.

Out in Yakima, Washington, Rev. D. W. Ferry, a minister, had numerous arguments with Col. W. W. Robertson, editor of the Yakima Daily Republic, concerning the editorial policy of that newspaper. These discussions resolved themselves into an opportunity for the minister to take over the editorial duties of Col. Robertson for one week, at the expiration of which he announced some new ideas concerning newspaper work in general and the task of editing the Republic in particular.

Rev. Ferry frankly stated the strain of preaching was not to be compared with the strain resulting from the insistent demands on him while he was in the editorial chair.

"The demands of newspaper space and time are so relentless that I could not stand up under them long," he announced, adding:

"Lots of persons think they could run newspapers and write editorials without the least difficulty. I wish they could all try it once, it would develop a fine spirit of tolerance, though after the experience they might not survive long enough to exemplify it. If I have to retire from the ministry I certainly am not going to try to find any rest in the editorial chair. It isn't there."

Rev. Ferry voices a wish which, likely, at some time or the other, every newspaper man has felt, if not expressed. If every person could, by direct contact, become acquainted with the multitude of problems the daily newspaper encounters every 24 hours, they would have, not only a kinder feeling for the press itself, but they would likely come out with a kinder feeling for their fellow man.

Hate has no place in journalism and little of it is found. Sometimes readers may conceive the idea that the newspaper heart is one of ice, cold and merciless, but closer examination usually will reveal the mistake. Newspaper hearts ordinarily are burdened with the problems of the communities they serve. The lead of the community is the load of the newspaper. To the press come the weary as well as the rested, the sinner as well as the saint, the poor as well as the rich, the wanton as well as the pure, the defiled as well as the undefiled.

To these the newspaper tries to render, as best it can, a service, a helping hand, a lift over the rougher places of life. The newspaper heart beats with pulsating desire, not only to record the pages of history as they are written, but to make of this world a better place in which to live.

Rev. Ferry is quite correct in his new-found estimation of the difficulties of newspaper operation, but perhaps he was not long enough at his knitting to recognize, as well, some of its compensations, for there is compensation in making of newspapers.

There is soul-refreshing satisfaction in the knowledge that every day the newspaper plays some part in furthering education, building schools and instilling a desire for them, in helping to get better roads, in aiding the advancement of God's Kingdom, in fostering movements for expansion of community growth, in pointing the way always to a better and fairer land.

There are difficulties, Rev. Ferry, but there are compensations, as well.

Japanese Diving King Planning To Hunt Treasure Under Sea

By LUTHER A. HUSTON
International News Service Staff
Correspondent

TOKIO—

Yumihachi Kataoka, Japan's "Diving King," is planning another expedition to recover long-lost treasure from the bottom of the sea. He is negotiating now with Lloyd's of London to undertake salvage of the gold and silver bullion which was lost when the British liner Egypt was sunk in the Bay of Biscay.

The treasure which Kataoka seeks is valued at approximately $5,000,000, slightly more than half being in gold bullion and the rest in silver bullion. It was lain at the bottom of the Bay of Biscay since the Egypt was sunk off Brest in a collision with a German ship.

Kataoka achieved his first fame as salvage monarch when he recovered more than $500,000 worth of gold bullion from the sunken Japanese ship Yasaka Maru in the Mediterranean Sea. This expedition was carried out in June, 1925.

Immediately after his success with the Yasaka Maru treasure, Lloyd's approached Kataoka with a proposal that he attempt to recover the bullion from the sunken Egypt. Kataoka was disinclined to undertake the venture at this time, so Lloyd's turned to Sweden and engaged the Neptune Salvage Company to undertake the task. This company has been unsuccessful and Kataoka again has been importuned to make the attempt.

Before starting out, however, Kataoka demands the Lloyd's agree to the enterprise. If an agreement is reached on this point Kataoka is prepared to set out at once for the Bay of Biscay to begin operations.

Although the Egypt lies in about the same depth of water as did the Yasaka Maru, the salvage work will be more difficult, Kataoka, says, because of tricky currents in the Bay of Biscay. He is confident, however, that he can retrieve the lost bullion successfully.

Kataoka's success in recovering lost treasure has enriched several investors who stand to reap greater rewards from their confidence in his ability. Several years ago Kataoka formed a small salvage company, investing his own small capital, and persuading several others to put their money with him. It was agreed that no dividends should be paid until Kataoka so decided and it was not until after the Yasaka Maru expedition that Kataoka was in a position to pay out profits. Then he declared a dividend of 998 per cent and the stockholders expect a much richer reward than this if the Egypt expedition is successful.

BROKEN HEARTS OF HOLLYWOOD

BY EDWARD CLARK

Copyrighted by Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc.
"BROKEN HEARTS OF HOLLYWOOD" with Louise Dresser is a Warner picturization of this novel.

SYNOPSIS

Mutually attracted, beautiful Betty Terwilliger and handsome Hal Chutney arrive in Hollywood as prize winners of newspaper contests for movie tryouts. Marshall, supposed to be responsible for many of the broken hearts of Hollywood, takes an interest in Betty. Hal and Betty are depressed and amazed by the number of people seeking work. Movie oldtimers see a mysterious resemblance in Betty to someone they cannot remember. Hal stops dismally as a cowboy. Betty, handed a scanty one-piece bathing suit to don, is shocked by the sophistication of the "bathing beauties."

With that, Pearl closed the door and left Betty alone in the room with the girls who, for a meagre five dollars a day, were required to possess physical perfections surpassing those of the Venus de Milo: to such as these, the movies give little and demand much.

During her informal introduction into their midst, the bathing girls had been languidly surveying Betty, appraising her with the old wisdom of their young eyes.

A blonde girl, balancing a gleaming cream body on one bare foot while she endeavored to thrust the

"Don't mind these roughnecks, sister. Make yourself at home."

Toes of the other into her hair ounce swimming suit, queried:

"How come you rung in on this kid? I thought Ruth Baker had the odd place cinched."

Betty, somehow, managed to keep her eyes open in the face of her questioner's unkind body. She replied with an inner twinge of guiltiness.

"I—I—don't know, except I have a contract for a two-months' tryout, and this was the only place they had to give me."

"Tough break for Ruthie. She's been up against it." The tall blonde commented in a matter-of-fact way.

"I'm—I'm sorry—" began Betty unhappily.

"What for? It ain't your funeral it's the fault of this dumb game that we're all fools enough to stick to instead of beating it back to the farm."

Another girl spoke up, after lighting a fresh cigarette from the butt of the old one.

"It ain't the game that's dumb. It's us. You can't blame it on the business that there's twelve thousand extras registered at the Union Booking Agency, and only work for twenty-five hundred at the most. Figure it out for yourself. It's the big salary that one in a million might get, and the kick we get out of seeing our mugs on the screen. That's the truth of it. If the Standard Oil or the Santa Fe railroad handed out a thousand iron men to their head stenographers and put their pictures on the bulletin boards, there'd be three hundred of us flopping around their offices for every job open. A lot for a little! Life's easiest virtue!"

She blew a cynical smoke ring at the tall blonde, and laughed. The other girls laughed, too, rather sheepishly. "Aw, you ought to be writing scenarios, Clare!"

Clare bethought herself to take pity upon Betty, who was still standing where she had entered and staring in bewilderment from one to another.

"Don't mind these roughnecks, sister. Welcome in. Make yourself at home. Get your suit on, then I'll give you a hand with your make-up, if you're green."

Though all the girls now smiled at her in friendly fashion, Betty was conscious of an undercurrent of resentment against her as a newcomer—and of hardboiled contempt for her obviously shocked modesty. This last worried her most, for she was dreading with a sudden heart the ordeal of disrobing in the open dressing room, unattended by the least privacy.

The girls made a place for her at the far end of the dressing table, and Betty unloosened her frock with fingers that shook, and drew it over the head of her trembling little body. One thing partially reassured her tortured mind as she unfastened her shoes, then rolled down and took off her stockings; it was, that none of the girls seemed to be watching her, or paying any attention to her. They were absolutely devoid of any consciousness of nudity, these girls; and of either morbid curiosity as to one another's figures or sensitiveness about their own.

There was a certain amount of protection, then, in their lack of interest; and with her wits hard applied to the task, Betty managed to squirm into her bathing suit half at a time, greatly aided in the process of concealment by a bathrobe which she found on a chair and draped around her shoulders. Wriggling—edging—watching—basting—there, the suit was on.

With a sigh of pure relief she bent still flaming cheeks over the job of lacing the high, fancy bathing shoes. Of course the worst was yet to come—the moment when on the set she would surrender the flimsy shield of her bathrobe and stand there in front of many strange people, many staring eyes, with most of her body exposed.

She could scarcely keep back tears of disappointment fathered by a wish that she had never come. Oh, if only she had quit the train while in that serene Iowa valley! There she could live without compromising all the things she held sacred in life—above all, her torch-like modesty. From this her thoughts turned wistfully to Hal. How was he faring? At least, she could be glad that he was in a different picture and would not witness her public embarrassment. It was great to be a man, she reflected ruefully, and get more clothes to put on instead of less.

The cynical girl, Clare, came now to help Betty with her make-up; and as Betty raised a grateful face to her experienced ministrations the girl saw its high color, saw the lurking tears, saw the bathrobe—suddenly knew.

"It's tough at first, honey, but not so bad—after a while. Never mind if the girls kid—just keep the robe on right up until they're ready to shoot the scene. I'll tip you off when to ditch it. Then stick in the back of the bunch. You'll be practically out of sight."

"Oh," said Betty miserably, "I didn't expect to play a part like this—there's much of this—this sort of thing to do?"

"Much! Say, there's nothing else but! If they were picturing the Lord's Supper they'd stick in a scene of the Bathing Beauties doing a Morgan dance on the Mount of Olives, against the sun set! You've gotta blame it on those guys who are known in the dictionary as half-wits and in the movies as directors."

Clare was interrupted at this moment by a thin, blowsy voice from the doorway:

"Give me a comb nail, one of you kids, please."

Betty glanced with the others toward the door, through which there had just stepped a creature so forlorn that Betty's heart beat fast with instantaneous pity. There was no way of judging the woman's age—she might as well have been thirty-five as sixty-five, for there are certain stages of feminine dissolution beyond which not only beauty and grace and charm are smothered out by the taint of sin and suffering, but where the years, too, become nondescript.

A queer, restrained hush had fallen over the ribald girls upon recognizing the newcomer; levity and sangfroid wilted before the living picture of what might as easily be ahead of any or every one of them. One of the girls respectfully held forth a cigarette, then a match, for the woman who smoked avidly.

She paused there to chat a moment with the girls and Clare, at the far end of the room with Betty, called down to her warningly:

"God, Mrs. Perry, you look like a wet rag. Better spruce up; the assistant's been looking for you."

Though Clare's speech was in the argot of the atmosphere in which she lived, her tone and manner were earnest and deferential; for there still lingered about this woman, a specter ever old-castle walls, something of the grand manner. And the smile she bent upon Clare was, for all the acrimony of her debauched face, graciously condescending. Her eyes, turning from Clare, met and rested for a moment upon Betty's.

Betty never forgot that first meeting of glances.

JUST LIKE A MAN

Why the South has economic health

SOUND prosperity arises only from the prosperity of many different types of industry. Sections of the country that are dependent upon one business or one crop sometimes have extraordinary prosperity; and they also have hard times. But it is those sections where production is diversified that have real economic health.

The present prosperity of the South springs from many different sources. This is seen from the record of freight carried by the Southern. Last year this traffic was made up as follows:

Products of agriculture and animals	10.65
Coal	28.90
Clay, gravel, sand and stone	10.22
Other mine products and minerals	3.62
Forest products	16.80
Manufactured products and miscellaneous goods	24.03
Merchandise in less than carload shipments	5.78

Just as the diversification of Southern industry has brought the South economic health, so also the diversification of the Southern's traffic should tend to stabilize its revenues and make its securities attractive to investors in the South.
